This paper addresses the morphosyntactic and semantic features of one of the less commonly studied verbal prefixes in Russian, the delimitative (or perdurative) superlexical prefix pro-.

The examples below exemplify the typical use of pro- in combination with temporal adverbials:

1. On prožil v derevne mnogo let.

2. On prosidel na rabote do 9 časov večera.

One of the peculiar features of all delimitative prefixes that has been noted before (cf. Svenonius 2004 and the literature cited there) is that they operate only on atelic predicates, do not telicize them and do not alter their argument structure in any other way. While I agree with this view, my study aims at exploring further the syntactic and semantic interaction between the prefix pro-, the structure and type of the predicate, and the overt (obligatory) presence of temporal adverbials. My approach is informed by the recent studies on the syntax of verbal prefixes in light of their adverbial-like properties (Istratkova 2006 on Bulgarian prefixes) and their semantics as measure operators (Filip 2000) or quantifiers over events (Svenonius 2004).

The structure below shows the position of pro- between the vP level (the domain of lexical aspect) and the AspP level (the domain of grammatical aspect). The idea about the functional category Q(uantization)P is based on Istratkova 2006 but is adapted to the present study.

!Diagram

The placement of pro- in the SpecQP accounts for the superlexical nature, scopal properties, and semantic features of pro- as well as the temporal delimitation of the event as a whole.

Istratkova, V. 2006. “When Prefixes Become Adverbs.” Ohio Slavic Papers 6
Svenonius, P. 2004. “Slavic Prefixes Inside and Outside VP.” Nordlyd 32.2