

Title: Russian Across the Curriculum: the Portland State University Russian Language Flagship
Author: Sandra Freels, Portland State University

This paper examines the theoretical and practical considerations that have contributed to the creation of a new Russian across the curriculum program that integrates Russian into every level of the undergraduate general education program. In particular, the paper will look at the challenges of identifying level-appropriate instructional materials and tasks for mixed classes or heritage and non-heritage speakers of Russian. The author concludes with a preliminary valuation of the effectiveness of the program and implications for future development.